America's National Park Service celebrated its 100th anniversary last year. In honor of this occasion, we will enjoy a look at the grandeur of scenery and the diversity of birds and wildlife of the national parks and other special places protected by the National Park Service. From Maine's rocky coast to Florida's everglades, through the Great Plains and badlands, the mountains and deserts of the west, and on to the unique habitats of Hawaii and Alaska, we invite you to celebrate our Parks with us!

Scott Stoner and Denise Hackert-Stoner are Albany-area birders and nature photographers. Scott is originally from the Town of Brookhaven here on Long Island, where he studied natural history under Dennis Puleston and Arthur Cooley. He is past president of both the Hudson-Mohawk Bird Club and the Audubon Society of the Capital Region, and a past officer of NYSOA. Denise is a field trip leader and past officer of the Bird Club. Denise and Scott, as founders and operators of "Naturelogues," have presented slide programs from Long Island to Rochester on a wide array of birding and natural history topics. They also teach nature photography workshops to several school districts and many conservation groups. Their award-winning photography has been exhibited widely across New York's Capital Region and published in National Wildlife Magazine, the Kingbird (including several covers), the New York State Conservationist, and several books. You can see some of Scott and Denise's work at www.naturelogues.com or on Facebook.
