Sharks: Why They Matter With Jamie Pollack of Shark Angels Wednesday, January 11, 2012 7pm

The very word “shark” evokes a visceral reaction in many people. Graceful, deadly, powerful and beautiful, sharks are admired by some, but feared by more. Tonight Jamie will take us behind the myths and discover the truth about these remarkable top predators of the deep. Join us as we learn the natural history of sharks, why they are a necessary and vital component of our oceans and the very real threats that they are facing today.

Jamie Pollack has worked in the advertising and design arena for 15 years, developing and creating branding strategies for clients in the financial, retail and non-profit industries. She is a consultant for several ocean conservation organizations. Her responsibilities include branding, design, policy change and outreach. An avid scuba diver for more than 18 years, she has logged more than 300 hours in the water, witnessing first hand the devastation that our oceans are enduring. It was this passion that led Jamie to co-found Shark Angels. Globally connected, Shark Angels around the world are taking action locally, fueled by empowering tools, a collaborative community, and a shared passion. Through positive education, media and grassroots outreach, Shark Angels are changing the future for sharks.
